I just wanted to listen in as a third-party. However, I do feel there was a lot of uncertainty around the answers to the questions asked by some in the audience, and those from the internet.

Seems like there is a lot of work that needs to be done on the side of the gov't in California to determine if this rule makes sense implementing. Based on the questions that were asked, I would say that the local residents are VERY concerned about Cadmium leakage out of the Cadmium-Telluride panels in particular.

Do you think maybe you guys should reconsider giving exemptions to solar panels that pose a potential health risk to California residents during their useful life (i.e., the 20-25 years before the end of life), when considering it seems there are quite a bit of unknowns on the potential health hazard of these things?

That seemed to me to be the overwhelming opinion of the public.
